438 Days Adrift in an Open Boat

Yellowtail were running here in Kalk Bay recently so I wandered down to the harbour to buy one.

I am a little squeamish about fish lying on a piece of plastic on the harbour floor, but reckoned cooking would kill any harmful germs.

I bought a smallish one and paid a guy to scale and gut it. Man, he was quick.

"Do you want the head?"

I didn't. Once he had finished he took a bucket on a rope and splashed it into the harbour. I thought he was going to wash the blood and scales off the cement block where he had been working, but to my horror he threw this filthy water over my fish.

My jaw dropped. That water's green, full of oil, stompies, fish derms, seal poo and who knows what else. If I fell into it I would be worried. Now my supper was being washed in it.

I hurried home and thrust my fish under the tap and hoped for the best. Happily we had no ill effects. It probably enriched my gut biome a thousand-fold.

The reason I'm telling you this is because soon afterwards I read the astonishing tale of Salvadoran fisherman José Salvador Alvarenga who survived for 14 months adrift in the Pacific Ocean after leaving Mexico on a two-day fishing trip in 2012. He survived by catching fish – and even turtles - with his bare hands. My dirty harbour water story paled into nothing against Alvarenga's tale of eating raw fish and drinking turtle blood. If you were squeamish, I guess you would have died.

His ordeal began when a storm hit the open boat he and Ezequiel Córdoba were in and destroyed the outboard motor. He sent an SOS to his boss just before his two-way radio died. That was the last anyone heard of the men until Alvarenga washed ashore on the Marshall Islands 14 months later. He had drifted over 10,000km across the Pacific.

Córdoba died after two months at sea. He had fallen into a deep depression and refused to eat.

His death was a huge shock to Alvarenga who told The Guardian that the next morning he had said to his dead crewmate: "How was your sleep? I slept good, and you?"

It took him six days to stop talking to his crewmate's corpse and slip him overboard.

Alvarenga's imagination kept him sane. He imagined delicious meals, chatting to friends, having sex and "walking the world".

"I could make myself believe that I was actually doing something. Not just sitting there, thinking about dying," he said.

After 438 days at sea, he thought he was hallucinating when he saw Ebon, a tiny island. His boat had drifted to one of the most remote spots on Earth, and he was saved.

A year later he told The Guardian that extreme hunger, thirst and loneliness had pushed him to the edge of sanity.

"But I didn't take my life. You only get one chance to live, so appreciate it."

An astonishing tale of endurance and survival.

And I will never worry about a bit of dirty harbour water on my fish again.

ADOPT ME PLEASE

MEET DIDI!

She's a sparkler with four legs. Two years old, crossbreed, and pure joy on a lead. Didi greets every person like they're her favorite and every walk like it's the best day ever. She's tireless, endlessly loving, and the first to climb into your lap when the adventure's over. She's looking for an active home with a walking buddy to match her energy. Come and meet her. Fair warning: she may have already decided she's yours.

If you would like more info about animals available for adoption, please feel free to contact our office on 044 384 1603
